A quick help and instruction for automatic translation for YouTube videos – subtitles:

If you press the "c" key while the video is running, the subtitle is automatically switched on, to which you can then also set a different language. Or alternatively, you can click on the first rectangle from the left at the bottom right of the screen, then the subtitle is also automatically displayed, which then appears first in English or in the language used in the video. To get then to the desired language of the subtitle, you go on the little wheel next to the rectangle at the bottom right - to the settings - and here you can select very many different languages, including German, Dutch etc. and you then automatically have the translation as subtitles in the running video. :-)

Indigenous and storyteller sometimes use terms that are not necessarily always translated correctly here automatically. In spite that the translation is not always error-free, most makes sense in the context - also in the automatic translation.

Enjoy!
